

Impact of Covid

Questions to Ask

Children experiencing systemic inequity are likely to be disproportionately affected by future disruptive events. Considering these reflective questions when planning may help mitigate this.

- What are the particular experiences and needs of:
 - Babies and the youngest children?
 - Children with special educational needs, disabilities and existing health conditions?
 - Families of young children who experience poverty?
 - Young children from marginalised communities, for example, refugees, asylum seekers, migrants and ethnically marginalised?
- How can measures be adapted to mitigate the risks to the most vulnerable groups of children?
- How can we ensure that children's rights and their voices are at the centre of decision making in the recovery, planning and response to crisis moments, particularly those children who experience inequalities?
- How can the harm that young children experienced because of pandemic measures be mitigated and redressed going forward?
